Richard,

I am applying for the Video Editor II position. My resume and reel are attached, and here is the short note you asked for.

What you get is an editor who already works the way this role is written. For six years at Lightbox I carried every client project alone, from ingest and organization through grade, mix, revisions, export, and final delivery. Nobody checked my timeline or my output. DaVinci Resolve is where I am strongest: I grade log footage daily, and at the Arizona Legislature I rebuilt the grading pipeline to run 3x faster on log and wide-gamut camera originals under a daily deadline. I clean dialogue and build sound in Audition, cut motion graphics in After Effects, and run a QC pass before anything leaves my desk. I deliver 98% of projects on time and 92% within budget, and I built a storyboard and review process that cut revision rounds in half, because the fastest way to hit a deadline is to stop rework before it starts.

Your clients sell technically detailed products to audiences who know those products better than the marketer does. That is the work I like. I have cut construction, trades, and industrial brand films where getting a spec or a process wrong loses the room immediately, so researching the product and protecting factual accuracy is already how I work.

I grew up around firearms. My dad had them, and some of my best memories are heading out to the desert to shoot. I will be straight with you: I am not an avid hunter or sportsman yet. Hunting has been on my bucket list for years, and I have a genuine interest in learning this industry properly rather than pretending I already know it. The closest thing I have done with real passion is paintball. I played a tremendous amount through my teens and into my early twenties, including competitively, and that world runs on a lot of the same things yours does: gear, marksmanship, and time outdoors with people who care about it.

Thank you for taking the time to read this. I would welcome the chance to talk.
